THUJA OCCIDENTALIS.

THUJA -> THUIA, from THUOS, incense

SOURCE

Thuja occidentalis, the so-called "white cedar", or Arbor vitae, is an evergreen conifer, not a true cedar. It is a smallish tree found growing in cool, damp regions of North America. The wood is very resistant to decay; hence its use for outside purposes such as fences, poles and roof tiles - cedar shakes.

The tree with its tapered and somewhat twisted trunk may reach a height of forty-five feet. The wood is fragrant and light; hence its misnomer of cedar. The foliage is very suggestive of the cypress with its green, adpressed, flattened; imbricated scales. The tree, however, differs from the rather mournful cypress in its more cheerful, jaunty appearance with up tilted branches. The cones also are distinctive, being cylindrical in shape with out-curving scales, aligned in almost sessile rows like ranks of tiny penguins. Both foliage and cones give off* an aromatic odour when crushed. A very fluid, light, transparent oil with a strong odour and a slightly acrid taste can be distilled from the foliage. The mother tincture is prepared from the fresh green twigs.

It typifies the HYDROGENOID
