Stresses

Engagement. Repeated engagement.

Personality

Love of diamonds. They have a loss of sense of self, identity, purpose, and loss of direction in life, a feeling of being at the crossroad. The question in their mind is, "How much am I valued or worth?" with feelings of being invisible, worthless, and betrayed. Or they feel outshone or unrecognized (a rough, uncut diamond). It's the situation of being at the crossroad, that great decision, this is it for life. It's the prince and the princess living happily ever after theme that we read our children at bedtime. In Hollywood when the film starlet has pried her man away from his wife and two kids, or he has seduced her by some abuse of power (offered her a part in a film), to have for himself, a fresh young body, and she gets a huge diamond as a reward. There is then a theme of power and powerlessness. Increased power, excited by power, mental power, having no personal power, subjugated, unprotected, dependence and independence. The need to shine forth and manifest the brilliant person that they have the potential to be. Also, the dilemma of leaving home to get married. Love or entrapment?
