PREFACE

The origins of this book go back to teachings received by myself some eighteen years ago, and probably many times before that. The teaching itself is as old as humanity and I make no personal claim to it. It has been adapted to the needs of the people of this day and generation.

In the early 1970s I met Dr Thomas Maughan, who practiced homoeopathy, and ran a small group in South London to which he taught a number of subjects including homoeopathy. I attended every medical class, and missed few others, noting everything he said. It became my privilege to spend much time with Thomas, often receiving complex teachings while driving him around in a car at the very high speed he insisted upon. These teachings I had to remember and copy down later. What I forgot is what the locust ate.

At that time, homoeopathy was largely unknown in this country. Those practising it kept a low profile, providing only for their small groups of patients and followers. It had lapsed into a deep slumber of approximately two generations. Most people had become bewitched by stories of wonder drugs, antibiotics, vaccines and other propaganda put out by the medical profession and the drug companies making vast profit by spoon-feeding misinformation to people. Before this time, during the last century and the early part of this one, homoeopathy had been quite widely practiced. Now it was time for a renaissance.

At Thomas's death in 1976 the torch was passed on. A number of colleagues and myself from Thomas's group got together with a similar group from North London and the Society of Homoeopaths was born, with something like twelve members. Soon after this Robert Davidson and I started the London College of Homoeopathy, the first college of its kind, with a first year class of thirty people.

The rapid growth of homoeopathy in the past two decades is testimony to the need of the time. There are tides in the affairs of humanity and if these are followed then much energy, goodness and abundance is supplied.

This book is an attempt to unveil homoeopathy as an evolutionary tool for the development of humanity in our new age. Its power, and far reaching implications are much greater than are generally realised. It is important therefore that we develop it for those who are in need now, and for those who will practice in the future with a far greater understanding than ours. Clinging to its original precepts to the exclusion of other knowledge will create a dead religion, becoming ever more meaningless and less effective.

Do not be afraid. Go out and be creative practitioners, for when we freely go with what is meant to be, the spirit of the age is with us.
