1. LIFE SAVING DRUGS IN HOMOEOPATHY

(With clinical testimony of pioneers)

He should know the cause and the nature of metastasis which is most important. Every sickness has a source and the apparent form of sickness changes from time to time confusing and creating a feeling that some new sickness or disease has crept in. So we find in actual practice that the same sickness manifests in skin in some season, then in digestive or rheumatic trouble in another season or part of the year. There are hundreds of ways and features in which the same ailment expresses itself at different time of the day or month or weather or season. A wise physician has to skilfully recognise the poison changing its symptoms and misleading the common man or the physician of the old school of thoughts to treat the different manifestations as different diseases and unable to establish a cure-I mean a perfect cure.

Human life has various aspects-physical, mental and emotional-all very important. If any of the three is disturbed, life becomes miserable. In our day todaylife, we find people fighting with death, while sick, others dragging life without any charm, still others creating unrest for the family and the society. The purpose and pleasure of life seems to be absent in many cases. Homoeopathy comes as a 'great saver of life'. It establishes a harmony and balance between physical, mental and emotional aspects. The diseased condition is set right for healthy living. Some particular features are given below for reference and interest of the readers:

(1) Patient struggling for life: Vital forces nearly exhausted, cold surface, especially from knees down to feet; lies motionless, as if dead; breath cold; pulse intermittent, thready; cold sweat on limbs. This is truly a desperate

2. HOMOEOPATHY-THE ONLY SYSTEM

Which claims and establishes the cure of diseases even in a single dose.

Which individualises a patient with regard to his physical and mental symptoms and the sphere of the drug and its symptoms.

Which studies metastasis-(changing of one so-called disease into another) in detail with regard to human body and the drugs and thereby aims to complete cure of the ailment.

Which considers the significance of sadness, melancholy; loathing of life; emotional imbalances; impulses; effects of fear and insults and establishes the mental health-the true source of joy and happiness in life.

Which studies the language of human body-that it calls symptoms and modalities.

Which gives balanced importance to subjective and objective symptoms i.e. the feelings and sickness expressed by the patient, and the apparent signs and troubles observed by the physician.

Which does not treat pathology as the prime base for diagnosis; and declares that disease is to be sorted out when in process; and that by the time pathology can find out something, much damage has taken place.

Which pronounces the importance of 'vital force' which when sluggish, and weak allow many ailments to creep in, and when regains, the sickness automatically goes away.

Which clearly points out that human system should not be cleaned on a 'house cleaning' system. It is fully self

6. VIEWS ABOUT ARSENICUM ALBUM

- (a) Arsenic is not a remedy usually called for in the beginning of diseases. The tendency of the symptoms is death ward. If you give the drug too soon, in a disease which in itself tends deathward, you may precipitate the result which you are anxious to avoid.
- (b) Do not give Arsenicum early in typhoid fever, unless the symptoms call for it unmistakably. Here it is especially dangerous to give it too soon.
- (c) I will say the same thing in regard to tuberculosis. In the last stages of these diseases, this restless tossing is not an Arsenic symptom, and Arsenicum will not relieve it. That is only a precursor of death.
- (d) You must be certain that the mental state is undisputably that of Arsenic, or you will do harm instead of good to your patient.
- (e) There is one exception to this word of caution, and that is in inflammations of the gastro-enteric system. I may say that Arsenicum may be given quite early in the case without doing any harm, on the contrary with much benefit.

Dr. E.A. Farrington

- (a) Arsenicum is one of our best remedies for fevers of a typhoid character, so useful is it that Boehx says, "Since Arsenic is, more than any other remedy, adapted to the worst forms of infectious diseases it seems wrong to delay its administration until the symptoms indicating it are developed in their most malignant intensity," and further, "our advice therefore is that Arsenic should be given more frequently

- (g) It is especially useful in asthmatic affections caused or aggravated by suppressed eruptions, like Pneumonia from retrocedent measles, or even chronic lung troubles from suppressed eczema.

I remember a case of asthma of years' standing to which I was called at midnight, because they were afraid the patient would die before morning. Found that her attacks always came at 1 A.M. Gave Arsenicum alb. 30th, and she was completely cured by it.

Dr. E.B. Nash

3. Upon the principles of similarity, Arsenicum alb. ought to be useful in typhoid fever. It is indeed so. Push Arsenicum alb. freely and persistently. I have cured apparent desperate cases with it

Dr. C. Hering

4. Enteric fever : Whatever other remedies are used, Arsenic should be given all through the course of the disease unless the attack is a very mild one.

Dr. EM. Hale

5. Measles: Arsenicum alb. is almost specific: prophylactic and curative; will remove all the sequelae of the disease.

Dr. Dewey

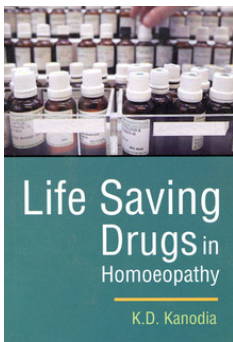

6. Arsenicum alb. is very efficacious in the 30th potency every half an hour for 4 to 6 doses for the usual colds due to change of temperature.

DrM.Blakey

7. (a) Arsenic is undoubtedly the safest remedy for asthma.

Dr. Boehr

- (b) The more the patient seems on the point of suffoca-
