PREFACE

My first book "Gharelu Homoeopathic Doctor" in Hindi and Punjabi became very popular.

I am fully satisfied that the object of my writing the above book is fulfilled—that the patient may not have to run to the doctor for small day-to-day ailments. The housewife should be able to find the medicine by reading the book.

Homoeopathic medicines are easily available in the market and are relatively cheap, but the doctors are expensive. Besides, where is the time to spare from the busy household routine and attending to the needs of the school-going children and office-going husband?

In many households in Delhi, quite a few homoeopathic medicines of common use are kept in stock, and the house-wife can dispense the medicine with the assistance of "Gharelu Homoeopathic Doctor." In case of doubt, or if the medicine given fails to give desired relief, the patient can get my advice on telephone, and I will be able to prescribe after asking a couple of questions.

I feel no difficulty in prescribing on telephone due to my vast experience of instant prescribing in the dispensary where I have to attend to an average of 40-50 patients in a matter of 1-1/2 or 2 hours.

It is with a view to sharing the above experience of locating the correct remedy quickly with other over-busy doctors serving in free homoeopathic dispensaries, or housewives or professionals who are unable to consult the books in the presence of the patients that this book is written.

Judging by the acceptance my books "Tat-fut-Ilaj" in Punjabi and "Saral Chikitsa" in Hindi, which were published in 1993, have received I do hope this book will also be found useful by the English-knowing homoeopaths.
